

THE GAZETTE.

SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 3.

[COMMUNICATED.]

FALL IN!

They tell me I have wandered, wandered far from truth and right,
That my girlhood, once so happy, now hath merged in darkest night!
They scorn my very image; every form and face I meet,
Looketh coldly down upon me, as I pass them in the street!
They tell me I have fallen, fallen deep in sin and shame,
I, once queen among ten thousand, the mention of whose name
Brightened many an eye at coming, causing many a heart to thrill,
With a thousand sweet emotions, at the bidding of my will!

Alas! too truly pleadst thou, glimmering like a dream,
Memory's roses all have faded, and more wretched than I seem.
I sit me down to ponder, ponder o'er this blighted life,
I betrayed by one who promised I should be his lawful wife,
He, whose sweet tongue and glance came with subtle smiles to woo,
Me, the young, confiding school-girl, deeming all he pledged was true.

But the spell was long since broken, every charm as quickly fled,
And I move among the living, though my soul within were dead;
Buried now the hopes that cheered me, cheered my childhood's sunny days,
Feeling tonight of earth is left me but to pine away and die.

Mother, dear, draw near and listen, listen to this prayer of mine,
Ere my heart grows dead and callous to those burning tears of thine!
Fold me gently to thy bosom, let me feel thy warm cheek's breath,
Ere my pulse hath ceased its throbbing and my eyes are closed in death!

Let now thy form bend o'er me, press again this fevered brow,
Remembering mother what I was and not how fallen now!

And let me mother feel that God hath all my sins forgiven,
Though fallen here, redeemed by Him, we'll meet again in heaven,
Where no cold water of the heart, shall cause a single sigh,
Or fallen ones shall meet the scorn of every passer-by!

Where I have enthroned in memory's tear for every fallen soul,
"How dark the trials here, where storm and cloud shall tell,"
"We'll dash the chalice cup aside" and whisper be forgiven,
Here drink eternal life and rest—there's room for all in heaven.
